Year End Tax Planning Guide 2024

“friendly expertise”

The ideal time to take stock.

The run up to the end of the tax year on 5 April 2024 is a good time to make sure that your family and business finances are arranged in the best way possible.

We have an early Spring Budget this year on 6 March 2024 which has attracted much speculation that taxes may be cut.

The freeze of many tax rates and thresholds continues to increase the government's tax take, but there are still many useful ways to arrange your affairs tax efficiently, and we provide an overview of some of these here.

Where you have discretion over the timing of income, for example, you can establish when that income is best taken — in this tax year or the next. A review before 5 April 2024 could therefore have a significant effect on your tax position. For Scottish taxpayers, to whom higher tax rates and thresholds apply, this is particularly true.

Each year brings its own tax challenges, and this year is no exception. Although the Autumn Statement 2023 was low on dramatic announcements, there are a number of important changes pre-dating this, which will take effect shortly. These will merit consideration as part of a year end review for many people, and include:

- further reduction to the capital gains tax annual exempt amount
- a further cut in the Dividend Allowance
- the introduction of basis period reform for unincorporated businesses.

As your accountants, we have the all-round vision of your circumstances that can really help make an impact, and we look forward to being of assistance.

Planning potential: income tax rates and allowances

TIP

Can you retain the personal allowance?

Adjusted net income, broadly speaking, is total taxable income before personal allowances, but after some deductions such as pension contributions and Gift Aid. If you are in the £100,000 to £125,140 income bracket, additional pension contributions or payments under Gift Aid, can help preserve the personal allowance.

Income tax rates and bands for 2023/24 are determined by which part of the UK you live in, and what type of income you have in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Rates and bands: English, Welsh and Northern Irish taxpayers 2023/24

Taxable income	Non-savings & savings income rate	Dividend rate
£0 to £37,700	20%	8.75%
£37,700 to £125,140	40%	33.75%
Above £125,140	45%	39.35%

Taxable income is income in excess of the personal allowance. Non-savings income is broadly earnings, pensions, trading profits and property income.

Rates and bands: Scottish taxpayers 2023/24

Taxable (non-savings) income	Income	Rate
£0 to £2,162	Starter	19%
£2,163 to £13,118	Basic	20%
£13,119 to £31,092	Intermediate	21%
£31,093 to £125,140	Higher	42%
Over £125,140	Top	47%

Scottish taxpayers continue to pay tax on their savings and dividend income using the UK rates and bands.

Looking to the future, the position is set to become increasingly different for Scottish taxpayers, as underlined by the Scottish Budget proposals for 2024/25. If passed, these increase the Starter and Basic rate tax thresholds for those entitled to the standard personal allowance, so that they become £14,876 and £26,561 respectively. The Starter, Basic, Intermediate and Higher rates are to remain unchanged, as are the Higher rate threshold and Top rate threshold.

From 6 April 2024 there will be a new 45% Advanced rate of tax, applying to income over £75,000 and bringing the total of Scottish income tax bands to six. Finally, the Top rate of tax increases to 48% for income over £125,140.

The Personal allowance

In principle, everyone is entitled to a basic personal allowance before any income tax is paid. This means that many people pay no income tax on the first £12,570 of income received. The personal allowance can be higher if you are eligible for the Blind Person's Allowance. It is reduced for those with higher levels of income. Where an individual's adjusted net income is more than £100,000, the personal allowance is reduced. It falls by £1 for every £2 of income above that limit, and by the time income reaches £125,140 or more, all personal allowance is lost. Timely planning can, however, delay the point at which this happens, or in some cases, mean the allowance is kept in its entirety.

The Savings and Dividend allowances

In some circumstances, you may be entitled to the Savings Allowance, with savings income within the allowance taxed at 0%. The amount of the allowance depends on your marginal rate of tax: that is the highest rate of tax to which you are liable. Basic rate taxpayers have a Savings Allowance of £1,000. Higher rate taxpayers have a Savings Allowance of £500. Additional rate taxpayers do not receive the Savings Allowance. The Dividend Allowance is available to all taxpayers, regardless of their marginal tax rate. This charges the first £1,000 of dividends to tax at 0%.

TIP

Dividend Allowance is more generous before April 2024

The Dividend Allowance falls to £500 from 6 April 2024, but until then, it is £1,000. Dividend payment before 6 April 2024 gives access to the higher limit for 2023/24.

Savings and dividends received above these allowances are taxed at the rates shown in the table. Savings and dividends within the Savings Allowance or Dividend Allowance still count towards an individual's basic or higher rate band. They may thus impact the rate of tax payable on income in excess of the allowances.

Some taxpayers may also be entitled to the starting rate for savings. This taxes £5,000 of interest income at 0%. This rate is not available if non-savings income is more than £5,000.

Planning potential: tax and your family

TIP

Make full use of bands and allowances – who should help?

From a tax point of view, it is usually more efficient for grandparents, rather than parents, to provide funds for investment for under-age children.

TIP

Pension planning in family companies

Pension contributions remain a highly efficient way for director-shareholders to extract profits. Pension contributions are deductible expenses for corporation tax purposes, so long as they are wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade, and where a spouse is employed by the company, the company can also make reasonable contributions on their behalf. As long as the remuneration package is justifiable, the company should be able to claim tax relief for these.

Make full use of bands and allowances

The incomes of married couples and civil partners are taxed separately. Each spouse or partner has their own personal allowance. In addition, married couple's allowance is available if one party was born before 6 April 1935. There is also what is called the 'marriage allowance', a transferable allowance that potentially makes £1,260 of the personal allowance of one party available to the other in certain circumstances. The donor's income must normally be below the personal allowance for this to be beneficial.

Where each party is in a different tax band, making sure that income is distributed appropriately is key. Optimally, the personal allowance of the lower income spouse should be used in full, and full advantage taken of access to lower tax bands. It may be beneficial to transfer income-producing assets, such as property, stocks and shares, or even bank accounts to do this. It is always important to make sure that any transfer is an outright gift, and that the donor no longer exerts control over, or derives any benefit from it. Evidence of such transfer is also required. Please do talk to us prior to any action, to make sure that arrangements are effective and do not inadvertently fall the wrong side of any anti-avoidance legislation.

Children are treated independently for tax purposes. They have their own personal allowance, annual capital gains tax (CGT) exemption and their own basic rate tax band and savings band.

Involve family in the business

For family companies and unincorporated businesses alike, involving family members and remunerating them appropriately is usually very beneficial. It can be a good way to multiply the opportunities to extract profits before hitting higher rates of tax, or where a spouse or child is unlikely to use their personal allowance, for example. But involvement must be a practical and commercial reality, and you must be able to evidence that family members genuinely work in the business.

Remuneration must be incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the trade and could be challenged if considered excessive by HMRC.

Note new CGT rules for separating couples

Transfers of assets between spouses can usually be made on a no gain/no loss basis for CGT purposes. But where spouses are in the process of separating, the rules are different. Until recently, the window in which such transfers could be made lasted only until the end of the tax year of separation. After that, transfers were treated as normal disposals for CGT purposes.

This has changed, so that for transfers on or after 6 April 2023, there are now up to three years after the tax year in which spouses cease to live together to make no gain/no loss transfers; and unlimited time if the assets are the subject of a formal divorce agreement. There are also special rules covering the position where someone has a financial interest in the former family home after separation, that apply when the home is sold.

Watch for Child Benefit charge

The High Income Child Benefit Charge (HICBC) is still something many people are unaware of. It applies where one of a couple gets Child Benefit, and either one or both partners has adjusted net income in excess of £50,000. Partner for these purposes includes someone you live with as if you were married, as well as spouse or civil partner. If both parties are over the income threshold, the charge is the responsibility of the higher earner.

The charge claws back Child Benefit at a rate of 1% for every £100 of income between £50,000 and £60,000. By the time income is £60,000, Child Benefit is withdrawn in full.

The government has said it intends to change the way that HICBC is administered and collected, so that those liable to pay can do so through their PAYE tax code. At present, however, taxpayers need to register for self-assessment, and it's the taxpayer who is expected to be proactive and notify HMRC of their liability to pay the charge.

There is an obligation to notify once adjusted net income is more than £50,000. In some cases, HMRC may make contact or send a nudge letter if it thinks someone is due to pay, but this does not happen automatically.

Family companies: assess profit extraction strategy

There's a changing outlook for director-shareholders in family companies. Recent developments, such as the change to the Dividend Allowance and National Insurance contribution (NICs) rates; and potentially higher corporation tax rates, all mean remuneration may need rethinking. Checking the numbers in your own particular circumstances becomes increasingly important.

Corporation tax

The main rate of corporation tax is 25% for companies with profits of more than £250,000. A small profits rate of 19% applies to profits of £50,000 or below. Where profits are between the two, corporation tax is paid at the main rate reduced by marginal relief. This provides a gradual increase in the effective corporation tax rate. In all, higher corporation tax rates and marginal relief may mean new choices for profit extraction.

Tax efficient remuneration

Traditional remuneration strategy involves a small salary and extracting remaining profits as dividends.

Salary: this is usually set at a level sufficient to qualify for state benefits (notably State Pension entitlement) but pitched so that no liability for NICs arises. Salary counts as a deductible business expense for corporation tax purposes, as do employer NICs. Unless a director has a contract of employment that means they are a 'worker', there is no need to pay minimum wage hourly rates.

For 2023/24, the preferred salary in many cases will be £12,570, so that the standard personal allowance is fully used. NICs for directors are calculated based on an annual earnings period on salary and bonuses. Though employer NICs kick in at £9,100, employee NICs are due on earnings over £12,570, with a further 2% charged above the upper earnings limit of £50,270. We can help you review an appropriate figure for salary to suit your circumstances.

Dividends: The Dividend Allowance continues to fall, whilst the rate of tax on dividend income has become higher. This means that extraction of profits through dividend payment has become more expensive. Whilst in many cases, it may still be tax efficient to take profits as dividends rather than salary, the decision is becoming more nuanced.

Bonus: In some cases, it may be more efficient to extract profit as a bonus, for example where there are not sufficient retained profits out of which to pay a dividend at the required level, or where corporation tax is paid at the full rate.

Like salary, bonuses are subject to income tax and NICs for the director, and employer NICs for the company. The cut to employee Class 1 NICs from 12% to 10% from 6 January 2024, will make payment of a bonus less expensive. The full effect of the reduction will only be felt from 6 April 2024. For 2023/24, directors will pay a 'blended' annualised NICs rate of 11.5%.

The rules around timing can sometimes be used to advantage. For corporation tax, bonuses can be decided after the end of the company year, when final results are known. They are still deductible in that year if paid within nine months. For income tax, there is scope to defer taxation of a bonus into a later tax year, or include in the current tax year, depending on how and when the bonus is declared. It is important to get the timing and procedure correct, and we can advise further.

Consider how to deal with directors' loans

It is common for director-shareholders in family companies to have a loan account with the company. As most family companies are what are technically called 'close companies', this brings them within scope of the 'loans to participator' rules. This can mean a charge to corporation tax, often known as a s455 charge, if a director's loan account is unpaid nine months after the end of the accounting period. For loans made on or after 6 April 2022, the charge is 33.75%.

Please do talk to us about the options for dealing with a director's loan in your circumstances.

Keep up to date with pension planning opportunities

It's been a year of significant change for pensions, with developments impacting high earners and workers over 50, in particular.

- From 6 April 2023, the Annual Allowance (AA), increased from £40,000 to £60,000. The AA is the maximum tax-relieved pension saving that can be made each year without attracting a tax charge.
- Change around limits for the tapered AA. From 6 April 2023, the tapered AA applies where adjusted income (broadly net income plus employer pension input) is more than £260,000 (up from £240,000) and threshold income (broadly net income less pension contributions) is more than £200,000. For every £2 of adjusted income above £260,000, the AA is tapered by £1, until it reaches a specified minimum.
- From 6 April 2023, the minimum tapered allowance is £10,000, rather than £4,000.
- From 6 April 2023, the Money Purchase Annual Allowance is £10,000, rather than £4,000. This lower AA applies where someone has flexibly accessed a defined contribution pension.
- The Lifetime Allowance (LTA) charge was abolished from 6 April 2023, and the LTA itself is abolished from April 2024. The LTA has capped the total amount that could be built up in tax-relieved pensions savings. Until 5 April 2023, it was, in most cases, £1,073,100, though a higher limit applied where there was LTA protection.

- Excess lump sums above the LTA are now taxed at the marginal rate of income tax, (rather than a 55% tax charge).
- The Pension Commencement Lump Sum (the maximum tax-free payment available on first accessing pension benefits) is now set at £268,275, except where protections apply.

Whilst welcome news, the tax position of high earners continues to be complex, and we would recommend reviewing the position on an individual basis. It is worth mentioning that pension planning for Scottish taxpayers can only become more significant with change to Scottish income tax rates and bands projected from 6 April 2024.

Making pension contributions remains one of the most tax efficient ways to invest for your future. Whether you are a director-shareholder, self-employed business person or partner, we would be happy to discuss this area with you further.

Check your State Pension entitlement

The State Pension age is regularly reviewed and recent speculation has said that this should be increased to age 71!

Your state pension is based on your National Insurance record when you reach State Pension age. You will need 35 qualifying years to get a new full state pension if you do not have a NI record before 6 April 2016.

Most of us know about qualifying years whilst working, but you may also get NI credits if you cannot work, for example you:

- claim child benefit for a child under 12 (or under 16 before 2010)
- get Jobseekers Allowance or Employment and Support Allowance
- get Carers Allowance.

TIP

Planning to minimise impact

Pension planning in family companies

For some businesses, the solution will be to change the accounting year end to 31 March; though this will not be an option for every business. It may not be viable for seasonal businesses, or those with international reporting requirements, such as large professional partnerships.

The consequences of basis period reform will vary depending on your circumstances. We will be pleased to help you take stock of the position now, looking at the effect on cash flow, checking any possibility of being pushed into higher bands of income tax, and advising on damage limitation strategies where appropriate.

We recommend that you check your state pension forecast especially as HMRC have extended the deadline for paying voluntary NI contributions for gaps in your NI records from April 2006 to 5 April 2025.

You can check your NI record, obtain a State Pension forecast, and decide if making a voluntary NI contribution is potentially worthwhile for you by accessing your Personal Tax Account at

Unincorporated businesses: plan for major change

Basis period reform

From 6 April 2024, there is a change to the way that business trading income is allocated to tax years for income tax purposes: 'basis period reform'. This means that businesses are taxed on the profits arising in the tax year, rather than their accounting year. It impacts only unincorporated businesses — the self-employed and partnerships — and within these groups, it only affects those that do not use a 31 March or 5 April year end. It does not impact companies.

In the long run, the change is meant to mesh in with the Making Tax Digital for income tax programme and provide a better digital experience. In the short run, for many businesses, it will accelerate the tax liability. The 2023/24 tax calculation for businesses not using 31 March or 5 April year end will be based on a longer period than usual: profits to the end of the normal accounting period, plus a proportion of profits from the end of the accounting year to 5 April 2024. Provisions exist to minimise the impact, by using overlap relief (where available), and spreading the 'additional' profits over five years. However, the change is still likely to mean higher tax bills in 2023/24 and following four years. There are also associated changes that will be needed to prepare yearly accounts and tax returns.

Planning potential: savings & investments and capital gains tax

TIP

Act by 5 April

We recommend taking stock of your position before 5 April 2024. ISA limits can't be carried forward into future years and are lost if not used in the tax year.

Individual Savings Accounts (ISAs): act by 5 April

Individual Savings Accounts (ISAs) are free of income tax and capital gains tax, and do not impact the availability of the Savings or Dividend Allowances. Although ISA limits have not increased this year, the tax benefits continue to be attractive.

There are four types of ISA:

- cash ISAs
- stocks and shares ISAs
- innovative finance ISAs
- lifetime ISAs.

The lifetime ISA can be used to buy a first home or save for later life. Funds are topped up by the government, which adds a 25% bonus, up to a maximum of £1,000 per year. After the age of 50, no payment into the ISA is allowed, and government top ups cease. Money can be withdrawn to buy a first home, on reaching age 60 or over, or if someone is terminally ill and has less than 12 months to live. In other circumstances, a withdrawal charge of 25% applies.

Rules and changes

The total that someone can invest in any tax year is set by the government. The limit has not changed for some years: the junior ISA limit is £9,000, and the limit for adults remains £20,000. The overall limit can be allocated across the various types of ISA available.

At present, it is only possible to subscribe to one of each type of ISA each year, but from 6 April 2024, multiple ISAs of the same type will be allowed each year, subject to the overall £20,000 limit. The exception to this is the Lifetime ISA. The limit here is £4,000.

Autumn Statement 2023 also announced some changes to the detail intended to widen the scope of investments permitted within Innovative Finance ISAs. These also take effect from 6 April 2024.

Anyone over the age of 18, who is resident in the UK can open an ISA. In the case of Lifetime ISAs, the applicant must also be under the age of 40. Crown servants and their spouses not living in the UK are also eligible. Junior ISAs are available for children under 18.

Until 6 April 2024, cash ISAs can be opened at the age of 16. From 6 April 2024, this changes, and applicants will have to be 18.

You cannot hold an ISA with anyone else: there is no facility for a joint ISA for spouses. You and your spouse have individual subscription limits, meaning that as a household you can invest a maximum of £40,000. Although you cannot hold an ISA on behalf of someone else, you can open and manage an ISA for someone in vulnerable circumstances, where they lack the mental capacity to do this for themselves. This can be done by applying to the Court of Protection for a financial deputyship order. In Scotland, application is to the Office of the Public Guardian in Scotland.

Consider the venture capital schemes

Generous tax incentives exist to reward individual investors in young, higher risk companies not listed on a recognised stock exchange, which would otherwise struggle to access finance.

There are three ways to access such relief: by investing through the Enterprise Investment Scheme (EIS), Seed Enterprise Investment Scheme (SEIS) and through Venture Capital Trusts (VCTs). Where the EIS and VCT rules contained sunset clauses, limiting tax relief to shares issued before 6 April 2025, recent legislation has now extended the operation of the schemes. This means that income tax and capital gains tax reliefs for investors in new shares issued before 6 April 2035 will continue to be available.

The potential for tax relief is considerable. With SEIS, for example, a qualifying investor can invest up to £200,000 in qualifying companies in a tax year, receiving income tax relief of up to 50% of the sum invested. Where shares are sold more than three years after the date on which issued,

TIP

More than one home?

Married couples can only count one property as their main residence for CGT purposes. This can be problematic if both parties are homeowners. In this situation, it's possible to decide which of the two properties you wish to nominate as your main residence and notify HMRC of this. We can advise further.

any resulting gain is also free of CGT. With EIS and VCTs, income tax relief of 30% is currently available on subscriptions for shares. There is also favourable capital gains treatment.

Obviously, this is a high-level overview, and close attention to the detail of the rules is needed. Please do talk to us for further details.

Take stock of capital gains tax rules and changes

Capital gains tax (CGT) is charged at 10% (18% on residential property) for UK basic rate taxpayers; and 20% (28% on residential property) for UK higher and additional rate taxpayers. Scottish taxpayers pay CGT based on UK rates and bands, and therefore need to assess their position based on UK rates.

Maximise potential of annual exemption

The CGT annual exemption is set to fall to a new low this year, as announced in the Autumn Statement 2022. From 6 April 2024, the exemption is £3,000, rather than £6,000. Government figures suggest that by 2024/25, more than a quarter of a million more individuals and trusts will be within scope of CGT for the first time as a result. The change makes tax efficiency even more important.

Everyone has their own annual exemption, so for couples, it makes sense to ensure that each party makes full use of this. In some circumstances, this may be achieved by transferring assets between you. Spouses (but not cohabiting couples) can usually transfer assets between them on a no gain/no loss basis for capital gains purposes. Where one spouse is a higher rate taxpayer, and the other has not made full use of their basic rate band, for instance, a transfer of assets has the potential to give access to the 10% tax rate, rather than the 20% tax rate. It is important that any transfer is outright and unconditional: do please talk to us beforehand to make sure your transfer is effective for tax purposes.

Review position for family home

If you sell a home that has always been your main or only residence for all the time that you have owned it, any gain should be covered by CGT Private Residence Relief (PRR). There are qualifying conditions for PRR: eligibility assumes, broadly, that the house is not let out; that no part of the home is used exclusively for business purposes; that the grounds, including all buildings, do not exceed 5,000 square metres in total; and that it was not purchased in order to make a gain.

The position is not always straightforward, however. Where, for example, a delay in selling means a property is let out and another purchased before the first is disposed of, the capital gains position can become complicated quite quickly.

Change in the last few years has reduced what is called 'final period exemption', which gives PRR for a specified period, even if someone is not living in the property. For property sold prior to 6 April 2020, this covered the final 18 months of ownership. Now it is only available for the final nine months of ownership. There are different provisions for someone who is disabled or in long-term residential care, and here PRR extends to the final 36 months of ownership.

Finally, it may be helpful to be aware that HMRC does sometimes challenge the availability of PRR. 'Residence' is not defined in the legislation. HMRC isn't simply looking at how long a property is occupied. It's looking for a 'degree of permanence, continuity and the expectation of continuity' to establish that a dwelling is being used as a residence, and what it calls the 'quality' of occupation is generally very important here. This extends to factors like sitting down for a meal, doing laundry and spending leisure time at a property.

Selling or gifting residential UK property

Where you've disposed of a residential property, remember that the gains must be reported, and tax paid to HMRC within 60 days of completion of the sale. We are seeing many cases where this has been missed and HMRC are levying penalties and late payment interest.

Be aware of rules on crypto assets

HMRC is increasingly on the lookout for income and gains made from crypto assets. Spring Budget 2023 announced that the design of the self-assessment tax return is to be adapted to reflect this. From 2024/25, the capital gains tax pages will specifically ask for information on income and gains from crypto transactions.

The buying and selling of crypto assets is usually treated as a personal investment, bringing it within the CGT regime. With the CGT annual exemption falling, it will become more important to monitor any crypto transactions you may make.

Latest developments

HMRC has recently launched a new service to allow someone to voluntarily disclose any unpaid tax on income or gains from crypto assets, including exchange tokens, such as bitcoin, non-fungible tokens and utility tokens. The service is essentially designed to bring someone's affairs up to date where transactions giving rise to capital gains were made in the past, rather than in the current tax year. We would always recommend professional advice before using HMRC disclosure facilities like this.

Planning potential: Gift Aid

TIP

Paying tax at more than basic rate?

Did you know that if you pay tax at more than basic rate, a payment under Gift Aid should result in a tax refund? This is because you are entitled to tax relief at your top rate of tax on the donation. This means you get the difference between the basic rate tax paid on the donation, and higher rate tax on the donation.

Use Gift Aid effectively

As well as providing a benefit to the charity or Community Amateur Sports Club (CASC) of your choice, donations under the Gift Aid scheme can provide a useful planning tool for donors.

Use Gift Aid to reduce taxable income

Payments under Gift Aid impact the calculation of your taxable income. This means they have the potential to keep income under key thresholds:

- High Income Child Benefit Charge (HICBC). For HICBC, clawback of Child Benefit payment begins where one of the couple has income over £50,000.
- Abatement of the personal allowance. If someone has adjusted net income more than £100,000, the personal allowance is tapered, and lost at the rate of £1 for every £2 over £100,000. If adjusted net income is £125,140 or more, the personal allowance is nil.
- Additional rate threshold in England, Wales and Northern Ireland: additional rate is charged on income over £125,140.
- Top rate threshold in Scotland: Top rate is charged on income over £125,140. From 6 April 2024, there will also be an Advanced rate of tax in Scotland, charged on income over £75,000 to £125,140.

Where income is close to any of these limits, a payment under Gift Aid could be very tax efficient.

Use flexibility on timing of relief

A carry back election can be made, meaning Gift Aid donations are treated as if made in the previous tax year. This can be of benefit where, for example, income is uneven; if perhaps you paid tax at a higher rate in the previous year. But there are strict time limits and procedures. A claim must be made on or before the date that the tax return for the previous year is filed; and not later than 31 January in the tax year that the gift was made. The claim must be made in the tax return: it cannot be made in an amended return. This means that the chance to make a carry back election is lost once a return is filed.

Take advantage of higher rate relief

Higher rate relief goes unclaimed by many donors. A repayment claim is made either via the self-assessment tax return, or by asking HMRC to amend the tax code.

To make a claim, there should be a valid Gift Aid declaration in place for all gifts made. To back up the claim, appropriate records should be kept. These should comprise the date; amount of each gift; and the name of the recipient charity.

Take stock of new restriction

As part of the post-Brexit rearrangements, the government announced in the Spring Budget 2023 that tax reliefs and exemptions for charities were to be restricted to UK charities and CASCs. EU and European Economic Area (EEA) charities registered with HMRC for tax reliefs and exemptions at that date, however, have had a transitional period in which to continue claiming relief. This ends on 5 April 2024. The move means that money from UK taxpayers is used to support UK charities only. If you have previously supported charities in the EU or EEA, or perhaps have made provision for such a charity in the terms of your will, the position may need reassessing.

Getting the tax relief right on charitable giving can be complex. We would be happy to advise further, especially where a carry back election may be of benefit.

Planning potential: IHT

Inheritance tax

There has been much speculation about the abolition of IHT but the Chancellor did not make any announcements in his Autumn statement and we await the Spring budget on 6 March 2024 with interest.

The current position is that Inheritance tax (IHT) is payable where an individual's wealth is in excess of £325,000 (the 'nil-rate band'). Those who own their own house and have savings, business assets or life assurance policies could be liable to IHT.

It is vital that people plan ahead to minimise their exposure to IHT. Here, we consider ways in which individuals can reduce their IHT liability.

Outlining IHT

IHT is currently charged at 40% on the proportion of an individual's taxable estate exceeding the nil-rate band. An estate includes both the value of chargeable assets held at death, plus the value of any chargeable lifetime gifts made within seven years of death.

The residence nil-rate band (RNRB) applies where a residence is passed on death to one or more direct descendants (including a child, stepchild, adopted child or foster child). The RNRB is set at £175,000 for 2023/24.

The additional band may only be used in respect of one residential property, which must have been, at some point, a residence of the deceased. In regard to estates with a net value above £2 million (before any reliefs such as APR/BPR are deducted), the RNRB is tapered at a withdrawal rate of £1 for every £2 over this £2m threshold.

Additionally, the RNRB is available when a person downsizes or ceases to own a home on or after 8 July 2015, and assets of an equivalent value (up to £175,000 in 2023/24) are passed on death to direct descendants.

Considering transfers between spouses

Spouses or civil partners may wish to make transfers of assets, as these are typically exempt from IHT (watch SDLT if you have mortgaged property that you wish to transfer). Both the nil-rate band and the RNRB may be transferable between spouses and civil partners, meaning that if the bulk of one spouse's estate passes, on their death, to the survivor, the proportion of the nil-rate band and the RNRB unused on the first death will increase the total nil-rate band and RNRB on the second death.

Make Use of Your Annual Allowance

Many people are understandably concerned about giving money away during their lifetime but stockpiling wealth often results in a large charge to IHT following their death.

You can make outright gifts of up to £3,000 in each tax year without IHT consequences. Any unused annual allowance from the previous tax year can be carried forward for one year. This means that if you made no lifetime gifts in the 2022/23 tax year, you could make gifts of up to £6,000 in the 2023/24 tax year.

Lifetime gifts to individuals in excess of this amount do not immediately result in IHT becoming payable (they are known as 'potentially exempt') but the person making the gift must survive for at least seven years from the date of the gift for it to have no negative IHT consequences.

Taper relief can also apply where significant lifetime gifts were made between three and seven years before death. Note, however, that the discount applies to the tax on the gift, as opposed to the gift itself, so it must ultimately incur a tax charge for taper to apply.

Regularly Gifting Surplus Income

If your net income exceeds your annual outgoings, you may be able to give away the surplus income without any negative IHT consequences. This is a valuable (and often overlooked) exemption, which, unlike the annual allowance of £3,000, is only limited by the amount of your surplus income.

To benefit from this exemption, you must be able to show a clear pattern of giving, rather than just an intention to do so. You must also be able to show that the gifts were made from income and that making the gifts did not result in a drop in your standard of living.

If the conditions for this exemption are met, qualifying gifts out of surplus income are immediately exempt from IHT and there is no need to survive seven years. Because of the more complicated nature of this exemption, good record-keeping is vital, and you should review your finances regularly.

Settle into Trust

Unlike an outright gift, settling assets into a trust give both control and flexibility. There are often good reasons why you may not wish to make lifetime gifts, such as having young grandchildren who are not yet financially responsible enough to receive significant sums of money. Trusts can allow you to maintain control of who receives money from the trust, at the same time as removing assets from your estate.

Trusts created during a person's lifetime are subject to a separate tax regime and IHT may be charged when the trust is created, as well as on each ten year anniversary and when assets are removed from the trust. Despite these charges, the rates of IHT that apply are lower than the 40% IHT charge that arises on death.

Trusts and their tax treatment can be complex to start with, please contact us for specific advice.

Maximise your Pension

Under current legislation defined contribution pensions are one of the most flexible and tax-efficient vehicles for saving and passing on wealth.

It is widely assumed that IHT does not apply to pensions. Whilst this is often the case, to be exempt from IHT you must ensure that your pension passes outside your estate. The effect of this is that your pension fund isn't payable to your estate; the trustees of the pension scheme have discretion as to who benefits (in the majority of cases the Trustees will follow the wishes expressed in any nomination form that you have completed during your lifetime).
